

by Adam Hellyer

This article is a companion to Jesus, Dead or Alive.

Did Jesus exist? As the song says, “Jesus loves me, this I know, for the Bible tells me so.” But, in today’s world of secular skepticism, saying “the Bible says...” is no longer considered sufficient evidence. The general feeling is that Bible evidence for Jesus is biased because it was written by committed believers. But we do not only have the Bible and other Christian sources. There is also plenty of evidence from Greek, Roman and Jewish sources. Each of the following examples is accepted by secular historians and tells us something about the historical Jesus.

Roman - Pliny the Younger (61-113 AD)

Pliny was a Roman civilian, a lawyer, author, and magistrate of Ancient Rome. He corresponded with many significant figures in the Roman world, and many of his letters have survived. While serving as an imperial magistrate, he wrote to Emperor Trajan about the trial and punishment of Christians. In the letter, he connects the Christians to their founder, Christ, and describes their worship.

“They had been accustomed to meet before daybreak and to recite a hymn among themselves to Christ, as though he were a god, and that so far from binding themselves by oath to commit any crime, their oath was to abstain from theft, robbery, adultery, and from breach of faith, and not to deny trust money placed in their keeping when called upon to deliver it. When this ceremony was concluded, it had been their custom to depart and meet again to take food, but it was of no special character and quite harmless...”<sup>1</sup>

Pliny the Younger provides ten or more historical facts relevant to Christ and the early church. But most importantly, he speaks of Christ, and how the Christians worshiped Him as God.

Roman - Cornelius Tacitus (c.56 - c.120 AD)

Tacitus was a Roman senator, orator and ethnographer, and one of the best Roman historians. His last major work, he includes a biography of Emperor Nero. Emperor during the 64AD fire of Rome, Nero diverted blame from himself to the church. Tacitus records for us those events.

“Nero substituted as culprits, and punished with the utmost refinements of cruelty, a class of men, loathed for their vices, whom the crowd styled Christians. Christus, the founder of the name, had undergone the death penalty in the reign of Tiberius, by sentence of the procurator Pontius Pilatus, and the pernicious superstition was checked for a moment, only to break out once more, not merely in Judaea, the home of the disease, but in the capital itself...”<sup>2</sup>

Not only does Tacitus speak of Christ as a historical figure and confirm He founded the movement of Christians. He also verifies Christ was executed by Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea during the reign of Tiberius, exactly as the Bible says.

Greek - Lucian of Samosata (c.125 - c.180s AD)

Lucian was a Greek Syrian satirist, writing in the second century. In his account of the life of a cynic philosopher, Proteus Peregrinus, he gives us one of the earliest records of Christianity written by a pagan. In speaking of how Peregrinus was welcomed into the Christian community he says,

“they ... set him down as a protector, next after that other, to be sure, whom they still worship, the man who was crucified in Palestine because he introduced this new cult into the world.”<sup>3</sup>

Although Christ here is referred to only as “that other”, the details correlate with Jesus of Nazareth, crucified in Palestine, and founder of the Church.

Lucian goes on to describe the remarkable charity of the church community, how they looked after those arrested for their faith, how they shared everything in common and willingly gave themselves up to imprisonment.

“The poor wretches have convinced themselves, first and foremost, that they are going to be immortal and live for all time, in consequence of which they despise death and even willingly give themselves into custody; most of them. Furthermore, their first lawgiver persuaded them that they are all brothers of one another...”<sup>3</sup>

This brief glimpse of teaching in the early church, and that it is credited right back to Jesus, is again totally consistent with scripture.

Jewish - Flavius Josephus (37-c.100AD)

Josephus served as a Jewish military commander in Galilee, in the early days of the revolt against Rome. However, after he became a prisoner of war, he gained favour with his conqueror, Vespasian, who went on to become emperor of Rome. Josephus took the name Flavius, Vespasian’s family name, but, though popular in Rome, he was viewed by Jews as a traitor. Like the Roman and Greek sources, he can be regarded as a hostile witness to Christ. Hostile witnesses are important because, while they may misunderstand or make harsh statements about the church, they are the least likely sources to knowingly endorse fabrications.

Josephus writes about the death of James, also known as James the Just, Jesus’ brother.

“Festus was now dead, and Albinus was but upon the road; so he [Ananus] assembled the Sanhedrin of judges, and brought before them the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ, whose name was James, and some others ...”<sup>4</sup>

Here, Josephus uses Jesus, the more famous brother, to describe James. But the description of Jesus is very brief. This is because there is a more detailed passage about Jesus earlier in Josephus writing.

“Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ. And when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him; for he appeared to them alive again the third day; as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe of Christians, so named from him, are not extinct at this day.”<sup>5</sup>

This passage, known as the Testimonium Flavianum, is believed to have suffered from some interpolations. That means phrases may have been added by well-meaning Christian scribes. While the overall content is believed by scholars to be authentic, the phrases they believe may have been tinkered with are, “if it be lawful to call him a man”, and some of the line about Jesus resurrection appearances.

However, even if we concede these objections, and take a reduced or “restored” version of the Testimonium Flavianum, Josephus still gives us Jesus as a historical figure, Jesus as a wise man, Jesus as a worker of startling deeds, Jesus a teacher of truth, and Jesus condemned by leading Jews. He also connects Jesus with the name Christ, and with founding the “tribe” of Christians. Some scholars would even allow he provides evidence for divinely foretold, third day, resurrection appearances.

Jesus, fact or fiction?

It is trendy these days to question or deny the historical Jesus. The internet has made it possible for those with no significant evidence to once more put forward ideas long ago rejected in academic circles. However, even in this brief look at recorded history, we can see there is no reason to doubt that Jesus really existed, that he lived in Palestine at the time the Bible claims, and that he died at the hands of Pontius Pilate. History also teaches us there is no reason to doubt His disciples believed they saw Him risen, and that this fact gave rise to the Christian Church.

For anyone who appreciates history, there is no question about the historical Jesus. As agnostic atheist Bart Ehrman says, “Jesus did exist, as virtually every scholar of antiquity, of biblical studies, of classics, and of Christian origins ... in the Western world agrees”.<sup>6</sup>

The real question is, knowing He did exist, what do we do with this knowledge? How should I respond to Jesus’ life and teaching? How should I respond to his claim to be God? And how should I respond to the witness of His disciples, who say, though He was crucified and dead, on the third day they saw Him alive again?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Adam serves as a leader in Joshua Generation Church where he pastors and teaches the Bible. He has a particular passion for worship and apologetics. You can follow Adam on his blog and Facebook.

Share this Post

Back to top

This article owes a debt to the scholarship of Dr Gary R Habermas

<sup>1</sup>Pliny the Younger, Letters, book 10, letter 96, translated by J.B.Firth, 1900

<sup>2</sup>Tacitus, Annals, translated by J. Jackson, 1925

<sup>3</sup>Lucian, Passing of Peregrinus, translated by A.M. Harmon, 1936

<sup>4</sup>Flavius Josephus, The Antiquities of the Jews, Book XX, translated by William Whiston, 1895

<sup>5</sup>Flavius Josephus, The Antiquities of the Jews, Book XVIII, translated by William Whiston, 1895

<sup>6</sup>Ehrman, Bart D. - Did Jesus Exist?: The Historical Argument for Jesus of Nazareth, 2012

Back to top